Open this 30 minutes into the game, provided you are alive.

Your temples throb, and the room spins around you like a child's top. You blink, rubbing your brows, and the sensation fades, save a faint buzzing at the edges of your consciousness. You feel just a fraction colder than you did only minutes ago, but when you touch your forehead your skin is warm and clammy. Perhaps it was something you ate.

The grating whispers in your mind grow louder and harsher, and your brain smolders with sudden pain. Your skin clings to your frame like waterlogged silk, and your hands gnarl and contort into ghastly claws, flickering as you gaze at them. Those around you cannot sense your agony, and you are powerless to tell them, a claustrophobic voice in a silent body. For the next five minutes, you can understand others, but cannot produce any verbal sounds of your own. In addition, your psychic health max decreases by 1.

Your bones are as hollow as a minstrel's wooden flutes, and every gust of wind plays a dirge within your soul. The slightest touch feels like a thousand rats gnawing at your skin, their mouths stinking of leprous decay. You can feel the blood and pus and bile oozing through your veins, thin and lifeless. When you open your mouth to speak, your tongue is forked like a serpent's, and only a senseless, ceaseless babble emerges. For the next five minutes, you can understand those around you, but you yourself can speak only gibberish. Your psychic health max decreases by 1.

You have a horrifying insight into the Cumaean prophecy. When the prophets of old spoke of a land fighting itself and being bathed in fire, they weren't speaking merely of civil wars and manmade disaster. No, they foretold a catastrophe where nature itself attacked humanity. The land will fight itself through earthquakes, and be bathed in the fire of volcanic wrath. You've got to make sure this wedding happens, no matter what!
